

Abstract

“Scholarly Authority in the Age of Abundance: Retaining Algorithmic Relevance in the New Landscape”

Michael Jon Jensen

As scholarly communications extends itself beyond any of our imaginings twenty years ago, we are faced with new opportunities for engaging each other and the wider world. But there are also threats: scholarly authority and expertise are now measured in Google units, by many in the larger world. How can we ensure that scholarly publishing retains relevance in this new environment?